

Green Anarchy magazine was a diverse, often contradictory, attempt to question, challenge, dissect, and dismantle not only civilization itself, but how we resist it, and how we heal from its devastating domestication. Each issue was put out, not as a mere position paper or thesis, but as a forum for dialogue and critique, and of questions... all contributing to the momentum against civilization.

We could have produced an anthology ten times this size, but chose instead to provide a more theoretical framework (rather than trying to re-produce the magazine or merely regurgitate everything we had done). Here our primary focus was on material unavailable anywhere else. We also chose to organize the book along general subjects, creating thematic sections in which essays could work with each other and add context, rather than simple chronological presentation.
